

It is one of the most chilling crime stories that you will ever watch, all the more so because it is real. For the first time a murder case has been filmed from start to finish. Last year, over six months, cameras shadowed the investigation into the disappearance of Natalie Hemming, recording footage of the police, the victim's family – and the suspect. The result is a unique insight into what it takes to be a major crime detective in Britain today and a shocking portrayal of an abusive relationship. It begins early on the morning of Wednesday, May 4. Natalie's mother has called 999. Her daughter isn't picking up her phone and she is worried...

CATCHING A KILLER

By William Leith