Father Christmas rock

Father Christmas strongly defended his delays to his new universal presents theme, having previously promised it would deliver Christmas presents time this December. Said Iain Duncan Santa, you must understand that creating a new database and IT system to determine whether children had been naughty or nice this year was a massive technological challenge, perhaps bigger than we'd envisaged." continued, "While I had previously assured you that your Universal Presents all would be delivered on time December 25th 2013, I now expect that this year's Christmas presents will not be delivered to the vast majority of children until October 2015. I accept the delays to Universal Presents mean plenty of red faces at Santa's Workshop, but on the plus side at least Rudolf doesn't feel so alone now," he ho-ho-ho-ed. Father Creditmess is 94.

Shabby 'UK Wonderland' set to close after complaints

Britain is to shut down following a tide of complaints from disappointed visitors, after the "amazing attractions" promised in advertisements didn't deliver. Most of the highlights on offer, including a "reliable transport network", "functioning schools, hospitals, central and local government", "trustworthy banks and police" or the "abundant jobs" market were either shoddy, didn't work or simply didn't exist. One Romanian visitor said, "It was rubbish - the whole experience was a complete rip-off, there were massive queues, everything cost a fortune and you got nothing in return."
